

Will the Natural Gas Market Heat Up?

By Blake Robben (May 23)

The key factors that may drive futures prices higher are threefold: First, current storage levels remain well below benchmarks. At 1.538 trillion cubic feet (tcf), natural gas inventories are 501 billion cubic feet (bcf) under the five year average and 821 bcf or 34.8% below the year ago figure. Secondly, there is a worldwide shift towards cleaner burning fuel for power generation particularly in Asia where there is a pollution crisis in some areas. Lastly, extreme summer temperatures in the United States could boost domestic demand, as well. Let's get to the charts and look at the weekly Natural Gas Futures contract. Good Day and Trade Well My Friend!

Chart provided by QST

My many years of trading futures markets does make a difference. Feel free to call or email me if you have any questions at 312.242.7990 and at blake.robben@archerfinancials.com.

Would you like to open an account with Blake? Go to our interactive New Account application at Open An Account. It is fast, saves on postage and it's green.

Futures and options trading involve significant risk of loss and may not be suitable for everyone. Therefore, carefully consider whether such trading is suitable for you in light of your financial condition. The risk of loss in trading futures and options can be substantial. Past results are not indicative of future results or performance. The views and opinions expressed in this letter are those of the author and do not reflect the views of ADM Investor Services, Inc. or its staff. Research analyst does not currently maintain positions in the commodities specified within this report. The information provided is designed to assist in your analysis and evaluation of the futures and options markets. However, any decisions you may make to buy, sell or hold a futures or options position on such research are entirely your own and not in any way deemed to be endorsed by or attributed to ADMIS. Copyright ADM Investor Services, Inc.